Jonathan Santore

Let Humanity be revered with the tenderest and loftiest devotion. Suffering, discouraged, downtrodden, hard-handed, haggard-eyed, care-worn mankind. Let these be regarded a little. Would to God I could alleviate their every sorrow, and leave them a chance to laugh! They are miserable now.

The world is out of tune now. But it will be tuned again, and all discord become harmony. When Slavery and War are abolished, and hanging and imprisoning, and all hatred and distrust—when the strife of humanity shall be, who will love most and help the readiest, when hangmen and generals, gibbets and jails shall have vanished from the surface of the delivered earth, then shall be heard music here, where they used to stand. The hills shall then break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field clap their hands.

Nathaniel Peabody Rogers (1794-1846), alt.

Program Note

Nathaniel Rogers was a newspaper editor, noted abolitionist, and a native of the town where I now live and work – in fact, the building where I teach stands where his family estate, a rumored stop on the Underground Railroad, once stood. Thoreau and John Greenleaf Whittier commented approvingly on Rogers' fiery writings on behalf of the universal equality of humankind. Few things have made me prouder of my adopted home than getting to know the work of this native son.
